RE:

Demonstrators
Induction Center
SW 4th/ Taylor

Sir, Approx: 7:30 AM this date received info that a group of demonstrators were blocking the main entrance to the induction center and some had chained themselves to the door.

I formed three squads of morning relief officers consisting of four men each and writer along with Lt. Brown and Sgt's Hayes and Stone proceeded to the area.

The squads were held in reserve in the event the demonstrators became violent. Several night relief officers were present and had the situation under control. The group was very peaceful and cooperative, they were singing religious songs and handing out leaflets. (see attached leaflet.)

Six men and two women had chained themselves to the door and refused to produce a key. The chain locking the door was cut by Lt. Brown with a tool borrowed from a passerby. (The bolt cutters we borrowed from the engineers office were defective.)

The arrested stated that they had been there since 5:30 am & the groups numbered about 40 people upon our arrival.

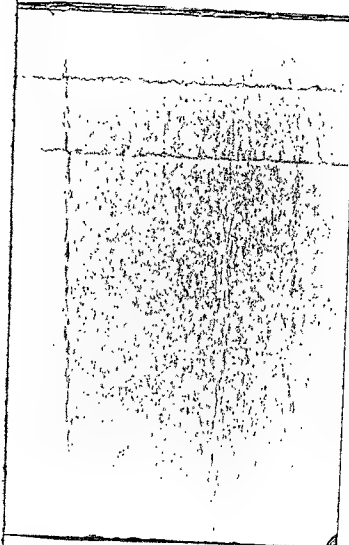

The arrested were transported via #99 to the police basement where booking slips were made and colored photo taken while they were still chained together. They were arrested for trespass, bail $50. (See Officer Huff's arrest report for details.)

After the arrests were made, the rest of the demonstrators quickly left the scene. We secured the squads at about 8:15 AM to resume normal patrol.

A STATEMENT CONCERNING OUR ACTIONS OF FEBRUARY 2nd

We hope for a world where the holiness of life is held as the highest value. We hope for a world where men will dare to risk for the sake of the holiness of life; not only to risk touching another human being as a brother, but to risk our own comfort and security for the sake of those causes which affirm life. We hope for a world where we will live our lives in harmony with each other and with nature, where our energy flows toward love and quality of life rather than toward war, exploitation and hatred. We look for a day when our government represents justice and humanity rather than propaganda and bureaucracy. In this age of possibility all these things are possible, but only when each of us decides to care enough about all life to risk our security and accept the sustained commitment required to effect real change.

All of us are trapped in the rages of a national disease. We are all prisoners together and now we must spend less time blaming each other and more time working together on our common problems. This group is here today participating in an act of civil disobedience, not to blame any single person or any single institution but to call attention to our common problems. We are here because we can no longer contribute to the shame of racism, poverty, and war by our silence. We are here as an invitation to all who can hear or read this, we ask you to join us in whatever way you can, by joining us now or by some constructive action of your own. In any event let us now begin to risk ourselves and take individual responsibility for our collective future.

8 Arrests Here End Peaceful War Protest

A peaceful antiwar demonstration at the Armed Services Induction Center in downtown Portland Tuesday morning resulted in the arrest of eight persons on trespassing charges.

Between 50 and 60 demonstrators assembled at the building, located at 425 SW Taylor St., about 5:30 a.m. The eight arrested persons had attached themselves to a chain which was looped through the double doors at the front of the building, blocking entry.

LODGED IN city jail in lieu of $50 bail on the misdemeanor charges are:

Michael Milton Carr, 23, of 503 SE 18th Ave.; Roger Atkinson Walke, 25, 1371 Patterson St., Eugene; Edmond Barry Hunt, 21, 5500 SW Corbett St.; Steven Lyle Adler, 23, of 30 NE Thompson St.; Peter Sumner Bates, 21, of 1372 Patterson, Eugene; James Anthony Hunt, 49, of 8215 SW 39th Ave.; Elizabeth Ann Hunt, 19, of 5042 SW Corbett St., No. 17, and Cynthia Wheeler, 23, of 503 SE 18th Ave.

Police arrived at the scene about two hours after the demonstrators appeared. Armed with a pair of bolt cutters, the officers were unsuccessful in their attempt to cut the chain.

HOWEVER, a member of the demonstrating group, which police said was "very peaceful," gave the officers a key to unlock the chain.

Police said the group appeared only to be milling around the chained eight, singing religious songs, and "gave the appearance they wanted to be arrested."

An Army officer who signed the misdemeanor complaints later Tuesday morning said the Army will not press for federal charges, even though the incident occurred on government property.

CLOSE TO 30 demonstrators later stationed themselves on the third floor of the Multnomah Building, where numerous federal offices are located.

The demonstrators arrived about 9:30 a.m., began singing and a few chained themselves together. Police arrived and cut the chain, then left, asking the demonstrators to do likewise. They refused and were still there in the afternoon.

Bail for each of the individuals arrested was $50.00.

On February 2, 1971, William Foster, Building Manager, Multnomah Building, 319 S.W. Pine, Portland, Oregon, advised at 10:00 a.m. on February 2, 1971, approximately twenty persons, many of high school age, staged a sit-down demonstration in front of the offices of the U.S. Defense Supply Agency, Third Floor, Multnomah Building, 319 S.W. Pine, Portland. Foster stated that at 12:00 noon he addressed the protesters and advised those present to vacate the premises or be arrested for trespass. When those still present did not vacate, officers of the Portland Police Department arrested sixteen demonstrators and charged them with "trespass."

Page twenty of the February 3, 1971, issue of "The Oregonian," a Portland, Oregon, daily newspaper, carried an article entitled "Induction Center, Defense Agency are Targets of Peaceful Sit-In." The article reads in pertinent part as follows:

"At 9:30 a.m. federal office workers returning from their coffee break found their offices blocked by a human blanket of protesters--and about a dozen Internal Revenue Service agents who have offices on the same floor.

"'Why don't you arrest them--that's what they are here for?' an IRS agent was asked.

"'Not me, buddy, too many forms to fill out,' replied the agent, who would not identify himself.

"At 9:35 a.m. someone produced the building manager, William C. Foster. By now the police had arrived, too.

"'I'm the manager of the building,' he told them, 'and I cannot permit this kind of conduct.

"'It's not proper.

"'I just ask you to leave.'

"But Father James Conroy, 28, a Roman Catholic priest of Immaculate Heart Parish, told the building manager his building was 'closed, and we're opening a new office here.'

"Shall we arrest them? a police sergeant asked Foster. Still uncertain of legal grounds, Foster said no.

"So at about 9:45 the 18 policemen and most of the federal agents adopted a 'low profile' and left the floor. Authorities hoped that if they 'went away' so would their problem on the third floor.

"It didn't. Although the corridor was clear (except for an agent behind every door), the protesters remained. They sang, they prayed and some of them asked newsmen why they hadn't been arrested.

"For three hours the situation developed to an impasse between those wanting to be arrested and those not wanting to arrest.

"In the meantime, police Capt. Norman Reiter engaged them in a spirited theosophical debate until Foster reappeared.

"'I'm Bill Foster, the manager,' he told them.

"'Almost three hours ago I asked you to leave...I hope I explained myself at that time.

"'I am again asking you to leave. Those of you who refuse will be arrested.

"'I give you three minutes to leave,' said Foster, whereupon about half the protesters left, leaving 16 behind.

"Reiter had asked them how they preferred to travel the half-block to jail--on foot or in the paddy wagon. The subjects decided to walk, citing the pollution problem as their reason.

"At about 12:30, the 16 were arrested and with some 20 officers walked happily off to jail.

"All 24 were charged with trespassing, and bail was set at $50 each."

NATIONAL PEACE ACTION COALITION

On October 7, 1970, a source made available a copy of "An Open Letter To All College Students" from the National Peace Action Coalition (NPAC) dated October 6, 1970, which self-described the NPAC as an umbrella organization formed at the Student Mobilization Committee National Emergency Conference Against Cambodia-Laos-Viet Nam War held at Cleveland, Ohio, on June 19-21, 1970, to unite all antiwar forces in the struggle to immediately end United States involvement in Southeast Asia. One aim of the NPAC is to gain the support of labor forces.

NPAC Headquarters is located at 2102 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, with branch offices located in major United States cities.

A second source, on October 11, 1970, made available a copy of a paper entitled "Organizing Local Peace Action Coalitions," published by the NPAC, 2102 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland. The paper states that the basic objective of the NPAC is to involve masses of people, including labor unions, GIs, and the black community, in the struggle to end United States intervention in Indochina through orderly and peaceful tactics. These tactics include building mass demonstrations and national conferences, distributing leaflets, selling literature, organizing forums and fund-raising activities, and testifying at state legislative hearings.

A third source, on September 1, 1970, advised the NPAC was formed and made operational by members of the Socialist Workers Party (SWP). The NPAC is heavily influenced by SWP leadership nationally and is a recruiting ground for this organization.

The SWP has been designated by the Attorney General of the United States pursuant to Executive Order 10450.

'Chain-in' war protestors arrested at fed offices

By ROD PATTERSON
Vanguard Staff

Two dozen persons—at least four of them Portland State students—were arrested Tuesday in two peaceful anti-war demonstrations in which some of the demonstrators chained themselves to doors while others sang religious songs.

The first chain-in was at the US Armed Forces Induction Center at 425 SW Taylor St., when eight persons chained themselves to the door at 5:30 a.m.

As a group of approximately 100 demonstrators watched.

The demonstration, which supporters claim was an "individual collective effort," broke up around 8 a.m. when Portland police arrived on the scene with wire cutters. Though they were unable to cut the chain, they borrowed pliers and successfully freed the demonstrators.

Demonstrators chained to the door did not block the entrance to the center and in a statement said, "This group is here today participating in an act of civil disobedience, not to blame any single institution but to call attention to our common problems."

The demonstrators, it said, "can no longer contribute to the shame of racism, poverty and war" by their silence. The eight chained were arrested and charged with trespassing.

At approximately 9:15 a.m., a group of demonstrators appeared at the office of the US Department of Defense Supply Agency in the Multnomah Building, 319 SW Pine St. There, 16 persons chained themselves to the office door. Entrance to and exit from the office was not blocked.

It was almost 1 p.m. when police arrested the 16 and took them into custody. They were charged with trespassing.

All 24 persons arrested were released on their own recognition.

They included PSU students Victoria Irwin, Casey Bailey, Mike Zaharakis and Charlene Myers.

A hearing to schedule the date of a trial is set for Feb. 16.

those chains & things

The presence of a new (yet very old) kind of political force is slowly making itself known in Portland. There's a group of people here, a very together but not an exclusive community, which is committed to revitalizing the practice of civil disobedience. Participants see this form of protest as an effective alternative to both traditional reformist politics and the self-defense or confrontation of more militant groups. The community, nameless, pretty much leaderless, and apparently growing, hasn't received much publicity from either the straight press or the Bridge, although they have organized a couple of demonstrations over the past three months. This week, however, the actions these people engaged in caught the eye of the media.

Briefly, what happened was this: at 5:30 am on Tuesday, Feb. 2, 8 men and women chained themselves to the entrance of the armed forces induction center on SW 5 and Taylor. About 60 other people were on hand for support. The 8 performed the act with full intentions of being arrested -- that is what civil disobedience is about, knowingly breaking a law in order to make a moral statement. And speaking of statements, this is part of the leaflet which was handed out this morning:

"This group is here today participating in an act of civil disobedience, not to blame any single person or any single institution but to call attention to our common problems. We are here because we can no longer contribute to the shame of racism, poverty and war by our silence. We are here as an invitation to all who can hear or read this, we ask you to join us in whatever way you can, by joining us now or by some constructive action of your own..."

The 8 were arrested. A couple of hours later, at the Multnomah Hotel on SW Pine and 4th, 8 other men and women chained themselves to the door of the Federal Defense Supply Agency. Again, there were many supporters. The police snipped the chains but initially no arrests were made -- they explicitly didn't want to. After several hours, however, the crowd refused to leave the building and the cops announced they'd start arrests. Sixteen people were taken to the City Jail, walking from the Hotel escorted by the police and accompanied by the supporters. By Tuesday night, all those who had been arrested were free again; the 24 had been released on their own recognizance. That is, no bail was necessary.

But the above outline tells little about perhaps the most important part of the demonstrations -- the participants. Meeting these people and getting a glimpse of their ways of looking at things was the most interesting part of the whole experience for me.

I met with them at 6:30 Monday night in a kind of schizophrenic capacity -- participant and reporter. We ate supper, drank wine, talked, sang, prayed, talked some more, all night Monday. Then at 5 am Tuesday we went to the induction center. So I did get to spend a fair amount of time with the people. As did two friends, reporters from the Oregonian.

The most obvious fact about members in this structureless group, to me anyway, is the Christian framework from which they start, in which they operate; their choice of songs, prayers, vocabulary and rituals all illustrate this orientation. One feels the spiritual presence of the Berrigan brothers in their midst. And the feeling of community they have created amongst themselves, their support and concern for each other. And, of course, their determined commitment to nonviolence as the only way to bring about lasting social change; their love and prayers for their enemies.

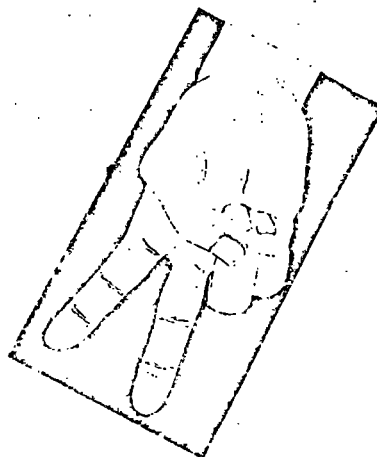

I can't recall ever having been in a demonstration where things were less uptight than they were at the induction center and the Multnomah Hotel. At this point I don't even know what that means, politically, but it certainly felt different. Friendly, laughing policemen, polite, smiling bureaucrats, helpful newsmen. And there were no visible factions among the demonstrators, except for a few wincing when "All we are saying is give peace a chance" was sung for at least the 20th time.

The demonstrations made me feel very good, and warm, and nostalgic. I enjoyed the feeling of community and the assurance that no harm would come to me. But some doubts nagged, questions which perhaps we should discuss together. On the one hand, acts of civil disobedience seem as "effective" as any other kind of demonstration. But what are the limitations of symbolic political actions, can they really lead to substantive changes in society? Are these the kinds of actions which can be safely engaged in by all segments of the population, or only the more respectable ones? How can the participants deal with the glaring inequity that they, breaking the law, are released on their own recognizance, while the Panthers and other political prisoners are held on $100,000 ransom without even having been convicted? What about Daniel Berrigan's decision that the time to surrender has passed?

There are haunting questions. Still, I think the participants in Tuesday's demonstrations helped create a lot of positive energy in Portland -- they showed themselves as a together, strong moral force, respected by many. And their message against death and celebrating life was heard by many, and probably listened to and thought about. That's something.

Protest Explained

Editor:

As many readers of the Sentinel may already be aware through the press and television, an "anti-war" demonstration took place on Feb. 2, 1971. This resulted in the arrest of 24 persons, half of whom are Catholics.

Because the news media did not, in fact, inform the public as to our purpose, our motivations and our vision we, the undersigned, wish to take this opportunity to communicate to the Catholic Community of Oregon the following statement which accompanied our action:

"We hope for a world where the holiness of life is held as the highest value. We hope for a world where men will dare to risk for the sake of the holiness of life; not only to risk touching another human being as a brother, but to risk our own comfort and security for the sake of those causes which affirm life. We hope for a world where we will live our lives in harmony with each other and with nature, where our energy flows toward love and quality of life rather than toward war, exploitation and hatred. We look for a day when our government represents justice and humanity rather than propaganda and bureaucracy. In this age of possibility all these things are possible, but only when each of us decides to care enough about all life to risk our security and accept the sustained commitment required to effect real change.

"All of us are trapped in the rages of a national disease. We are all prisoners together and now we must spend less time blaming each other and more time working together on our common problems. This group is here today participating in an act of civil disobedience, not to blame any single person or any single institution but to call attention to our common problems. We are here because we can no longer contribute to the shame of racism, poverty, and war by our silence. We are here as an invitation to all who can hear or read this, we ask you to join us in whatever way you can, by joining us now or by some constructive action of your own. In any event, let us now begin to risk ourselves and take individual responsibility for our collective future."

None of us is all that confident of our own prudence, righteousness or effectiveness. However, humbly, yet with all the confidence of our faith, we feel we have to keep trying to express—in our lives and in our actions—what is presented in the above statement.

Jailed war protesters charge prisoners treated like animals

By ROD PATTERSON
Vanguard Staff

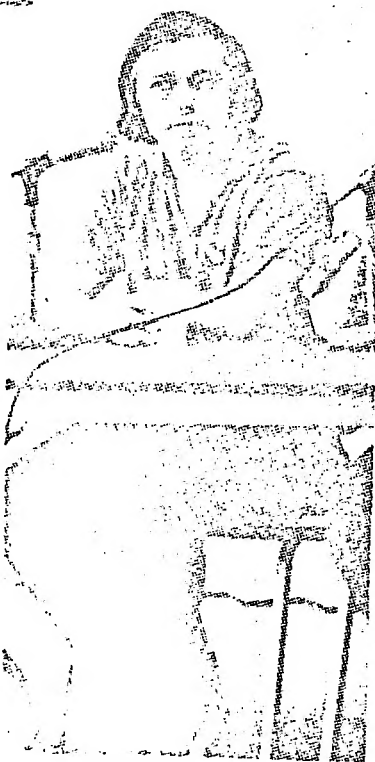

At least two of the 24 persons arrested in two non-violent protests against war Feb. 2 feel prisoners in the Portland City Jail are treated worse than animals in the zoo.

Allegations by PSU students Mike Zaharakis and Charlene Myers included everything from trustees selling drugs, and poor, if any, medical treatment, to starch diets void of meat, vegetables, fruit or milk.

Two dozen persons were arrested Feb. 2 after chaining themselves to the doors of the US Armed Forces Induction Center at 425 SW Taylor St. and the office of the US Department of Defense Supply Agency in the Multnomah Building, 319 SW Pine St. They were charged with trespassing and later served two-day sentences in the city jail at the Portland police station.

Zaharakis, member of the Campus Conservatives and the Society of Strangers, said the non-violent action was taken because the persons involved were tired of marching in the streets saying, "Peace now."

"We're now willing to put our bodies where our rhetoric is," said Zaharakis.

While in jail, Zaharakis, who said he is a former Air Force medic, saw what he thought was an advanced case of scurvy, a disease resulting from a lack of vitamin C.

"You're not served meat, vegetables, fruit or milk," he said. "It seems like you get spaghetti three times a day."

Myers said she knew three pregnant women in jail with her who were fed this diet. "Most of the women are in for 180 days—the normal sentence for prostitution—and they usually stay there until they are about to deliver," she said. Their babies, she said, are born with such multiple defects that none of them are ever known to live.

"If we let these conditions continue, then we are all guilty," said Myers. Zaharakis said jail officials are guilty of murder and genocide of infants who die because their mothers were not fed adequately, guilty of feeding zoo animals better than jail inmates, guilty of selling drugs to inmates and guilty of allowing medical problems to develop in jail.

He said a physician makes rounds in the jail every night but added that his services consist of little more than distributing aspirin.

When an emergency medical problem arises, he said guards are of no help. "One man had an epileptic fit because the police took away his pills," Zaharakis said. "The guard saw it and walked away. The so-called 'criminals' did everything they could to help the man."

Zaharakis said the inmate never was examined by a physician.

The drunk tank was another facility criticized by Zaharakis. He said it has not heating and a toilet that does not work.

"Actually, the guards, in some cases, were humane, but the jail isn't," he said. "A jail has no place in a free society. I'm sure if judges could spend at least one night there, they would never send another human being to jail."

Myers said inmates have no rights in jail and described the whole experience as "dehumanizing."

Zaharakis said the non-violent group plans Thursday to ask City Commissioner Lloyd Anderson to spend a couple of days in the jail to see the conditions first hand. The group will also present Anderson with a list of charges.

Anderson will be at PSU to speak on "Communications between the University and Community" at 10 a.m. Thursday in SMC's Ballroom.
